Crisis Counseling (Creative Pastoral Care And Counseling) (Creative Pastoral Care & Counseling)

Synopsis

Crisis Counseling unites the historic skills of pastoral care and counseling with current methods of crisis intervention from the fields of psychology and psychotherapy. Like the original edition, the present book is written for ministers - both clergy and lay - who are called upon to care for those in crisis. Its concepts and methods will be of value to mental health professionals and crisis hot-line volunteers as well. Crisis Counseling discusses the minister's role as a crisis intervener, incorporating the understanding of recent crisis intervention theory and exploring how the dynamics of crisis is vital for effective crisis management.

Howard W. Stone, Ph.D., is a psychologist, marriage and family therapist, a pastoral counselor, the author or editor of many books in the Fortress Press Creative Pastoral Care and Counseling series, and a professor emeritus at Texas Christian University. Two previous editions of Crisis Counseling have sold 45,000 copies in the United States and has been published in six other countries.

Provides insight into developing a precise crisis method

Crisis Counseling provides practical examples and advice to help care givers counsel others through crisis situations. Howard Stone manages to give great advice without using overly technical jargon, making his book an easy read for the uninitiated.

Very clear and concise; will use it to teach a course.

It was good

Good info maybe needs an updated edition
Good but needs an update. A little lacking from a religious perspective but useful

This material is just what I expected sort of because it puts things in order for practical uses to any one seeking a guide to counseling and it makes one aware of their present approach to the matters at hand.

Great Book

Very good. Thanks.
